

THE JAMES CORONES AWARD Now Accepting Nominations

The James Corones Award in Leadership, Community Building and Communication recognizes the impact of mid-career scientists and engineers on their chosen fields across a range of areas.

Its namesake, a distinguished researcher and administrator, founded the Krell Institute, a nonprofit organization dedicated to serving the science and education communities. Under his guidance, Krell grew to supervise many projects and programs, most notably two prestigious Department of Energy-sponsored education initiatives: the Computational Science Graduate Fellowship (DOE CSGF) and the National Nuclear Security Administration Stewardship Science Graduate Fellowship (DOE NNSA SSGF). Jim retired from the company in December 2016 and died on April 28, 2017, after a long illness.

Broad eligibility: Mid-career researchers at a national laboratory, an academic institution or in industry.

Prize: A cash award of $2,000 and an engraved gift.
